

Money Is Misunderstood

Many people misunderstand money. Money is only a tool, not a goal. A house full of money means nothing until we see what the owner does with it. The value of money depends only on what you do with the money, not the amount.

In many movies, people are quick to seek out a wealthy partner for marriage.

During a seminar organized to promote human capital, attendees were interested only in receiving grant money, or free money from the government; they had little or no interest in the seminar itself, human capital development.

A pastor prayed for free money to be transferred to the bank accounts of church members. The church echoed A-M-E-N.

So much interest in receiving, and being around money, but little or no interest in learning how to earn money, and how best to use it.

When you don't know who you are, where you are, and your mission in life, through learning and education, having money is not much use to you.
